The Six Sigma Project Simulation in Information Technology is designed to guide you through the development of a Six Sigma project. To do this, you'll create a Six Sigma project case study that examines a fictional Information Technology company.

What is a case study? It's a descriptive research paper that looks at a subject then completes an analysis of that subject. You'll collect data about the supplied company and their processes, then analyze that data.

What are the requirements to complete this simulation?

- Six Sigma Black Belt certification from MSI or another organization.
- Strong writing skills
- Strong critical-thinking skills
